WARRANTY & LOG BOOK SERVICING

A COMMON CONCERN.

For a new car buyer its their right to have someone else other than the manufacturer dealer, service the vehicle with out putting the warranty at risk

To set the record straight, dealers can not declare a warranty void if the buyer has the vehicle serviced by someone else. However the buyer/owner of the vehicle has the obligation to ensure that the selected service center/repairer employs qualified staff and that the servicing matches manufacturers specifications and only genuine or appropriate OEM quality parts are used.

TRADE PRACTICES ACT

Under the Trade Practices Act dealers cannot limit their warranty obligations or claim the warranty is void if the vehicle is serviced by someone other than the dealer or its agent the Statutory Warranty still applies to new and second hand cars.

The Act prohibits anti-competitive exclusive dealing which can involve a business attaching conditions to the sale of goods there by restricting the buyer's freedom to choose who they deal with; in the case of a vehicle, and who will service it.

STATUTORY WARRANTY

Statutory warranties entitles the purchaser to seek a refund, compensation, repair or replacement if the goods are faulty, fail to do the job intended or do not match the sample shown or have hidden defects

Some retailers encourage consumers to buy an extended warranty offering additional benefits for extra cost. Consumers should check that the protection offered is more that that available under the statutory warranty.

Remember you are not entitled to a refund if you change your mind or discover that the product is cheaper elsewhere

EXTENTED WARRANTY

A dealer may offer consumers Extended warranties as a way to attract sales by showing that they stand by their vehicles extended warranties do not over ride the statutory warranties in any way. They may be given on the basis of money back no questions asked or there may be conditions attached such as regular servicing or time limits on claims a consumer may avoid extended warranty if, for example the car is fitted with non genuine parts
